THE IRISH PEOPLE AND HOW THEY REGARD THE BRITISH ARMY PETITIONS TO WOMEN

By MAUD GONNE. ing World.)

The nationalist movement in Ireland as moved along various lines, all with one common object to attain—that of making English government in Ireland difficult and of preparing Ireland for in-hat against recruiting for the English rmy and navy.

In every town, in every market, a very fair throughout the country, antiationalists follow the recruiting serreants and warn boys against joining he English Army.

English Poor Fighters. The English are aware that they make ery bad soldiers. They are anxious to get others to do their fighting for them. American readers can see this from the news of the present war. The only reginents that have fought at all well or the English side have been the Scoton regiments. The Irish regiments are too full of sympathy for the Boers to fight well for the English, which accounts for the fact that whole regiments of Irish soldiers have allowed themselves to be aken prisoners to Pretoria.

We have carried Transvaal flags through Ireland, right up to the Vice-roy's castie in Dublin. In Cork, the Union Jack was torn down and trampled by the crowd, so that the English dare not send their forces by way of Dublin. It was dampening to their ardor to ge the bad eggs, rotten fish and jeers of the rowd. The more they arrested, the mere came on, till at last it seemed the whole city of Dublin was in the crowd and the police gave it up.

Auti-Recruit Movement Not New The anti-recruiting movement is about three years old, and already the task of the English recruiting sergeant is an nhappy one in Ireland. Ten years ago there were 38,000 Irishmen in the English service. To-day there are only 26,000, and this reduction is largely due to the movement against it, though emigration accounts for some it, though emigration accounts for some of it.

In each of those villages of starving people, two years ago, I haw the English recruiting sergeants trying to get the starving boys to join the English army or navy.

When national sentiment is appealed to—it is stronger than any other in Ireland—I have seen hungry men turn away with contempt from the bribe of the recruiting sergeant.

I believe we shall be able to put a stop entirely to recruiting of Irish soldiers for the English army ere long.

APPEALING FOR PEACE.

WHO CAN STOP THE WAR. Oriental Rugs.

The last of the Atty-word appeals to Queen Victoria, Mrs. William McKinley and Bre. Paul Kruger, imploring those three influential wom-en to use their efforts to step the cruel and bloody war new going on in South Africa, are printed to-day. The appeals published during the past ten days are not one-thousandth part of the number receive most of which were written by women, and all of which are no

A FEW MORE OF THE APPEAL SENT IN:

To Mrs. McKinley, Queen Victoria, Mrs. Mrsger: Out of the hearts of humanit For the sake of the mothers, wives of mothers, wives and sisters, and sisters who suffer; for the sake of the uncessing, unvarying prayer humanity, and in His name, for whom the war in South Africa may cease. the angels sang, "Peace on earth, good will toward men," I entreat you, O mighty Queen and beloved wives, use your loving influence to stop this cruel war! Miss F., box 105, Hudson, N. Y.

Thought is eternal. Christ was born Thought is eternal. Christ was born to show us peace; and still the spirit of this thought of His comes to us through centuries breathing peace. With peace comes health of body, mind, spirit. Let the constant thought and prayer of women be for peace, perfect. spirit. Let the constant thought and prayer of women be for peace, perfect peace, the one perfection. E. B. W.,

All of my schoolmates and I have been praying to Jesus Christ to stop the bloodshad of those English soldiers, and not to worry the Queen in her old age. And thit Mrs. Kruger would beg of her husband's army to stop and leave what belongs to England alone.
